and also the HTML and the mediaPlayer with the code below, of course the HTML part works fine. var src = video.get(0).src; document.getElementById('img').src = src; A: My bad, it was a Javascript error, after fixing it, the src was set correctly. On New Year's Day, a frustrated Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D., Calif.) told staff that she'd like to see someone from the Hillary Clinton campaign contact her directly to be ready if Clinton's presidential campaign "flips on her and goes after me." "It seems to me that her people have not sought to clarify how I can serve the public," Feinstein said in an email to staff on Jan. 1, after days of pro-Clinton misinformation made the rounds online. According to New York magazine, in that email, Feinstein wrote: "I am a woman of integrity who understands the value of public service. I have not taken money from any corporate interest, including Microsoft, which may cause me to be vulnerable to attack if the campaigns change their strategy against me. "I respectfully request that someone from the Hillary Clinton campaign contact me directly to answer these questions: 'Is there any circumstance under which I could be a target of a large-scale attack on my position as a Senator from California? And what steps do you recommend I take to protect myself?'" In fact,

Feinstein was not attacked and never expressed interest in being a "target." Read the full email below: From:
