DPRK’s “Sputnik” has warned that US President Donald Trump’s threat to “totally destroy” North Korea – made on Twitter – is a “biggest challenge” to the peace process on the Korean Peninsula. The US leader sparked international outrage on Sunday when he tweeted that North Korea “will be met with fire and fury like the world has never seen.” Trump’s tweet marked a dramatic escalation of the rhetoric that has led to alarm over a possible clash between the US and the North. On Tuesday, North Korea claimed that the US was prepping for “a nuclear war” against it. Referring to Trump, Kim Jong-Un’s state media agency said in a commentary published on Wednesday that the US leader’s “reckless speech and action” will ignite a “nuclear war.” The North Korean statement came after Kim’s Foreign Minister Ri Yong-Ho told reporters during a brief trip to New York that North Korea is considering a range of “highest-level” options, including a “pre-emptive operation” against the US mainland. In response to Trump’s tweet, North Korea’s army chief of staff also warned that the Korean army will “demonstrate its strong ability to counter the nuclear war.” On Friday, the KCNA news agency carried another statement by the North Korean army that said the US must “immediately stop” threatening moves or “no matter how small and light the war might be, it will not avoid our strong retaliatory strike which will be made against the US.” That same day, North Korea’s state news agency reiterated its threat of nuclear tests on a near-daily basis. The regime’s mouthpiece reported that Kim Jong-Un
