Field of the Invention This invention is in the field of radar system synthetic aperture radar (SAR) and it can be used for land targets, sea targets and airborne targets, as well as for airborne target avoidance, for example, for an aircraft. 2. Description of the Related Art In conventional SAR, a radar antenna beam is not directed at a target; however the radar antenna is continuously moving and as the radar system and antenna move relative to a target, the beam follows the target. Thus, it is known to use radar system synthetic aperture radar (SAR), wherein the radar antenna beam is continuously directed at the target, such as a vehicle. U.S. Pat. No. 3,673,409 describes an airborne radar which can be used for a synthetic aperture radar function. The radar of the '409 patent can produce a primary beam which is continuously directed at a vehicle and produce a secondary beam from the continuously directed primary beam, which secondary beam is continuously directed at the ground. The radar of the '409 patent is continuously directionally steered so that the primary beam is continuously directed at the vehicle. The primary beam is produced by two antenna elements whose lengths are different. The antenna system of the '409 patent describes the radar system of the primary and secondary beam.Q: Syntax for taking a function as an argument in Java 8 I am trying to do something which has a lot of similar code and was wondering if there is a way I can do it more concisely in Java 8 lambda expressions. What I am doing is writing a factory method which will create either one of two interfaces depending on an argument. public class MyFactory { public static T makeProtocol(Prot

Talking to Kids About Their Sexuality It's something we try to avoid, but the fact is that kids, even older kids, sometimes need to talk about their sexuality and the fact that they're attracted to girls and guys. There are lots of ways to do it: Revealing the truth when you're in a one-on-one situation, like in a discussion or at lunch. Making jokes about it—and having kids make jokes about it, too. But when we're talking about sexuality with kids, it's important not to talk down to them. That means not making the kids feel stupid when they come across a question that makes them uncomfortable. It means guiding them, but not in a way that makes them feel attacked. It also means not trying to impress them—or worse, making them feel like it's necessary to keep them interested in your life. There are some, but I think not. Look at it this way: In a world where gay marriage is legal, people can serve openly in the military, and parents can openly discuss their kid's sexuality at school, do you really think kids wouldn't talk about it in a similar, similar way? Oh, I didn't think so! So, there's no harm in talking about it, unless you're being abusive. At that point, speaking clearly about sexual topics is a really good idea. And remember, kids who aren't comfortable talking to their parents about it can always ask their teachers for help.
