PORTLAND, Ore. — The opening statements in the trial of three men accused of abducting two teenage girls in Oregon began

Tuesday after four days of court hearings that drew national attention to a crime that shocked the city of Portland. Defense attorneys said the three Central American men kidnapped the girls to keep the families from asking questions about the men's immigration status. Prosecutors said the men showed violent tendencies, including one of the men tying one victim to a tree with a leash and beating her. One of the defendants, Jeremiah Oviedo-Reyes, took the stand in his own defense. He admitted he lied to police and the court when he said he was abducted at gunpoint after he and the other two defendants asked two Portland teenagers for directions to a laundromat. Oviedo-Reyes said in a rambling statement that he was "confused," "scared" and in shock when he heard police were looking for him in connection with the kidnapping. He said he and the other two accused men concocted a story about being abducted at gunpoint to hide their involvement in a series of documented drug crimes. Tuesday, June 4, 2014, in Multnomah County Circuit Court. The defendants were arrested while trying to remove the two teenage girls who were being held captive at a large ranch near Canby. Police say the trio was trying to reunite the girls with a woman who had signed them over to the defendants' group for $3,500. The FBI rescued the girls and arrested the three suspects. The trial is expected to last several weeks. "It's a very sad situation," said Peter Rogosheske, a Eugene attorney 3da54e8ca3
