Free From 30 Top Nude Native American Women pictures and royalty-free images from iStock.. It was a fresh, early autumn morning in the Pacific Northwest. The weather was hot and muggy. It was day one of a multi-day outdoor photography workshop. We were talking about the day's tasks as the sun slowly rose in the sky. John, the gifted photographer and director, and I, a handsome male model with an intense look and a warm smile, were standing across from each other shooting our images. I was a little nervous. I knew I had some work to do to look like a model, but I didn't know how to get there. I was just beginning to wish I had spent more time in the locker room at the gym before I left for this workshop. John gave me a quick look and smiled before addressing me, "For the most part, you don't have to worry about looking like a model. For starters, I am going to show you what you should be wearing next time you are out in the sun. I'm also going to give you some tips on how to position yourself. The body language you use when you are on camera will help the viewer connect with your image. You should start with a big smile, no matter how cool or awful the environment is. And you should use your eyes to convey your interests and thoughts. I can't count how many times I've caught people staring at my cameras and not looking at me or anyone else in the room. The first rule of looking good on camera is to look at the camera. I'm always amazed at how many times I see people looking away from the camera when they are supposed to be looking at the camera. Why waste your time looking at something you don't want to see? Make sure your eyes are fixed on the camera when you are on camera. Having the sun in your eyes is a problem, and you want to do everything you can to avoid it. If you have a great lens on your camera, the sun should be blocked out. If you don't have a great lens, don't go outside without it. Trust me on this one. If your camera is with you, always bring it with you. If you have trouble remembering it, send your camera home with your girlfriend or wife. If you're the type of person who forgets to bring your camera, you
